Carved Stone Bust

A Rago auction catalog called a large carved bust made of black stone a "Haida Argillite carving" and then explained the meaning of the word "argillite." Antiques can be made by people, companies or methods with unfamiliar names, but this time the auction house realized that bidders needed help. Argillite is a fine-grained black silt stone found in only one spot, the Slatechuck Creek on Haida Gwaii, also called the Queen Charlotte Islands, in the Pacific Ocean off the northwest coast of British Columbia, Canada. The Haida, a North American native culture, were the original people living on the islands.

They have been making carvings of wood and argillite since about 1800. Pipes used with tobacco have been found that were made from 1810 to 1840. The location of the quarry is a secret and only the Haida are permitted to use the stone. Today, Haida carvers make and sell carved argillite jewelry and decorations — "tourist art" made to be sold to visitors. Both the Haida and European cultures are depicted. Many pieces are amusing.

The bust of a man, made about 1840s to 1850s, sold for $18,750. A carving of one piece as large as a bust is unusual and valuable because the stone breaks easily. Twentieth-century interest in the antique arts of native peoples has led to higher prices.

This 9 1/2-inch-tall carved bust made of black argillite sold for more than twice its estimate at $18,750. It depicts a European trader.

Beanie Babies, Lion King or even Jerry from the movie "Despicable" Me can sell for over $100.

CURRENT PRICES

Kewpie doll, black, side-eyes, red lips, jointed arms, incised, Rose O'Neill, 6 inches, $210.

Advertising sign, Stolz Premium beer, extra pale, extra fine flavor, white and yellow text, beer bottle, gray ground, 8 x 12 inches, $330.

Leica Camera, 50-mm Elmar lens, IIIa, black, leather case, 1938, $420.

Chanel clutch, fabric, black, white, logo printed in two directions, envelope shape, flap, 5 x 7 1/2 inches, $840.

TIP: If you move your antiques to a new home in a van, watch out for damage. Check the antiques as they are unloaded. Sweep the inside of the moving van and save any small pieces of veneer, wood or screws that might have fallen off your furniture.
