Soil temperatures

Tree and shrub roots can be damaged or killed if the temperature of the soil around them dips to 10°F or lower. To help protect roots, look for deep ruts or cracks in the soil around the roots, and fill them in with additional soil, tamping down lightly. Watering well in autumn helps to prepare the soil to better protect the roots from dangerous conditions. Covering the root zone only (not against the trunk) with 4-6 inches of organic mulch, as well as allowing snow to cover the mulch, will form a barrier that can help the soil retain optimal temperatures for root health. - Brenda Weaver
